MANAGER'S COMMENTS

In February 2024, U.S. equity markets recorded impressive gains, with the Nasdaq Composite leading at 6.2%, followed by Nasdaq 100 (5.4%), S&P 500 (5.3%), and Dow Jones Industrial Average (2.5%). All major indices reached new highs, and the S&P 500 closed above 5000 for the first time. Consumer Discretionary was the top-performing sector (+8.7%), followed by Industrials (+7.2%), Basic Materials (+6.5%), and Tech (+6.3%). NVIDIA notably rose over 28%, contributing significantly to the Tech sector's success.

A notable development was the hawkish shift in expectations for the first rate cut, adjusted from March to June. The Federal Reserve emphasized data dependency and a cautious approach in its communication. Despite strong January economic data, with CPI and PPI running high, retail sales were weak, and continuing jobless claims rose, indicating increased difficulty in finding immediate employment.

The U.S. bond market retreated in response to the Fed's hawkish tone, leading to rising yields. The 10-year Treasury yield increased to 4.23% from 3.88% at the start of the month. Earnings season concluded positively for large-cap companies, with 73% of the S&P 500 beating projections, reporting 4% YoY growth for the second consecutive quarter. However, small-cap earnings are in a recession, particularly for S&P 600 companies.

The labor market showed strength, with the unemployment rate at 3.7% for the third consecutive month. Nonfarm payrolls, private sector payrolls, and average hourly earnings exceeded expectations. Inflation remained a concern, with CPI and PPI showing increases. The Fed's preferred measure, the PCE Price Index, rose 2.4% YoY.

Oil futures rose over 3% in February, influenced by geopolitical concerns and the potential for OPEC+ production cuts. Average gas prices in the U.S. increased by 7% from the previous month.

Looking ahead, Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell's remarks on March 6th and 7th are anticipated to impact market positioning. Key events include the February Jobs report on March 8th, CPI release on March 12th, PPI on the 14th, and the FOMC rate decision on March 20th. Additionally, "triple witch" options expiration and S&P Index quarterly rebalancing are scheduled for March 15th.
